

Rotherham Hotel History

Rotherham is situated 103km north of Christchurch and is known as the hub of Amuri, as it was once the centre of the county of Amuri. Amuri was actually part of the Nelson Province, mainly settled and stocked from that area. It became part of Canterbury in 1876. George Duppa freeholded his holding in 1855, and sold out to the Rhodes Brothers & Wilkin in 1863. They sold it as St. Leonards by auction in 1877 as 9 stations, 19 farms and a township, named Rotherham.

Rotherham got its name after Rotherham in England, where the Rhodes were born. The street names in Rotherham, such as George, Heaton and Sophie Street were named after members of his family, as well as Wilkin Street after their partner, and Davidson after their station manager.

Rotherham Hotel (established in 1878), was originally a two storied building with stables, however was unfortunately burnt down in 1920. Rumour has it the fire started upstairs by an unattended candle left in the bathroom. The original stables built at the same time remain as the surviving structure.
